Harvard University

- History of Harvard University
- Harvard is the oldest institution of higher education in the United States, established in 1636 by vote of the Great and General Court of the Massachusetts Bay Colony. It was named after the College's first benefactor, the young minister John Harvard of Charlestown, who upon his death in 1638 left his library and half his estate to the institution. A statue of John Harvard stands today in front of University Hall in Harvard Yard, and is perhaps the University's best known landmark.
- The symbol of this university is dark red colour, the same colour has University sport team and their newspaper.

The Public Garden

The Public Garden. Swan boats

The Public Garden has a pond where you can ride on boats in the shape of swans. They're called Swan Boats. There are many other parks along the Charles River.

The Public Garden

The Public Garden was established in 1837 when philanthropist Horace Gray [<http://www.bahistory.org/HoraceGray.html> Horace Gray: Father of the Boston Public Garden] petitioned for the use of land as the first public botanical garden in the United States. Grey helped marshal political resistance to a number of Boston City Council attempts to sell the land in question, finally settling the issue of devoting it to the Public Garden in 1856. [Kellogg p 345] The Act establishing use of the land was submitted to the voters on 26 April, 1856 where it passed with only 99 dissents

The Boston Massacre

- Background
- In 1767, with the end of the military threat from France, Britain imposed a series of taxes, culminating with the Townshend Acts, which proved unpopular in the colonies. Boston was a center of the resistance and the British sent troops in 1768 to protect Loyalist interests. General Thomas Gage ordered the 14th West Yorkshire Fusiliers and the 29th Regiment of Foot to Boston; they landed on October 1, 1768. The friction between the troops and the colonists grew from this point with several events most notably including the death of Christopher Seider on February 22, 1770.
