Royal National Theatre a government-funded repertory company based in London.

In the early 1590 Shakespeare and his company set up his own theatre, the Swan, where his company performed his plays.

Nowadays an exact reconstruction of the Globe is being built and visitors can experience what it was like to go to the theatre 400 years ago.

Acting, both by amateurs and professionals, is still very much alive in Britain.

The National Theatre complex opened in 1976-1977 in its new building.

About 5⁰million people, many of them tourists, go to see a musical every year in London.

The show's most popular song,
Memory,
has now become one of the most successful songs in musical history.
