Read the poem and compose a 4-line poem of your own using these lines.

They are like you and me,

They are like you and me,
Though their eyes don't see;
But they can hear more,
And they are better listeners.

Though their ears don't hear;

They are like you and me,

Though every step hurts;

Though their eyes don't see;

But they want action,

They live in the world of silence,

They are like you and me,

But their hands become their eyes,

Though their eyes don't see;

But they love life and show its beauty to us.

And they are better listeners.

And they can do what we don't dare.

They are like you and me,

And they can see what we don't.

But they can hear more,
