Arkhangelsk-My Native Town.

Arkhangelsk is the administrative center of the Arkhangelsk Region. It is situated on both banks of the Northern Dvina, not far from the place where it flows into the Dvina Bay of the White Sea.

Arkhangelsk is one of the oldest cities in the Russian North. It was founded in 1584 by the order of the Russian tsar Ivan IV, known better Ivan the Terrible.

Arkhangelsk is one of the longest cities in Europe. It stretches for more than thirty kilometers. Its population is about 370 thousand people.

Arkhangelsk was the first sea-port of Russia, the cradle of Russian shipbuilding, major center of fishing and sea-hunting, the gate to the Arctic Region.

The city owes its name to the Archangel Michael Monastery situated nearby in those distant days.

Arkhangelsk is justly considered to be the cradle of Russian shipbuilding. It was here, on the island of Solombala, that in 1693 Peter the Great founded the first state-owned shipyard and a year later the sea-going merchant ship "Saint Paul" was launched.

During the Northern War different types of warships were built at the Solombala yard.

At the end of the 18 century, Arkhangelsk also became a center of sawmills. Present-day Archangelsk remains one of the leading centers of timber and timber-chemical industry in Russia.

The city is also a center of science and education in the North. It has Northern (Arctic) Federal University ,several schools of higher learning, a number of colleges.

Arkhangelsk is well-known for its museums, musical culture, artists and craftsmen.

The city is partly located on a number of islands, and getting from distant parts of the city to the center used to be a problem for its dwellers.

At present two modern bridges across the Northern Dvina and one across the Kuznechikha River connect the suburbs of the city with the center.
