Education

The education system in Canada depends on the province and includes 6-8 years of primary school , 4-5 years in high school and 3-4 years at university.

Unlike other developed countries , Canada has no national system of education: according to the constitution , each province itself has been in question. Each provincial education system reflects religion, history and culture of this province. Provincial heads of education departments headed by elected Minister set standards approve items and funding educational organizations . Responsibility for the management of primary and secondary schools assigned to local elected school boards or commissions . Council plans school budgets, hiring teachers and school schedule set in accordance with provincial legislation.

The federal government provides financial support to higher education and the teaching of the country's two official languages - English and French. It is also responsible for the education of Alaska Canadian military and their families , prisoners. In general , the federal government spends about 20% of the country's annual spending on education.

The education system in Canada has always had to take into account the cultural diversity of the population. Over 70 ethnic groups speaking 60 languages of the country . In many schools, students are more than 20 separate ethnic and cultural groups. In Toronto and Vancouver, more than half of public school students speak other languages (other than English or French). Mother tongues are taught in many parts of the country . In some provinces such classes are organized directly in the schools. Various projects funded from the federal budget, intended to implement unconventional approach to teaching native languages .
