The advantages of studying in the UK

The educational system of Great Britain

Compulsory education in the UK is only for children from the age of 5 to 16 years. Children under this age can attend or can not attend kindergartens, by their parents' wish.

Pre-schools

Pre-school education in the UK has no binding status. Currently about 30% of children 3 to 4 years of age go to pre-schools.

Primary and secondary schools

In the public sector, children start going to school at the age of 5, where they study until the age of 11.

In the private sector, education begins at the age of 7. Before this age, children attend kindergartens or special chosen education institute. Before they are 13 years old they attend primary school, which is sometimes called the Preparatory and then, after successfully passed exams, they enter the secondary school. At the age of 16 they pass the same examinations of the "first-level" as the children who attend public schools.

Schooling "advanced level"

At the age of 16 young people have to decide which way to go next: either to continue education in order then to go to university, or to get the vocational training and start working.

Those who wishes to go to university must "pass" a special two-year course.

At the age of 18 (in Scotland - 17), at the end of the course, students take exams of the second ("advanced") level, the so-called "A-levels" ("Highers" in Scotland) and get The General Certificate of Education, GCE A-levels.
