Alexander Ovechkin

Aleksandr Ovechkin is a Russian professional ice hockey winger who currently plays for the NHL's Washington team. First Ovechkin played in the Super League for FC Dynamo Moscow. At the American Club, Alexander spent eight seasons in 2010 and became the team's captain.
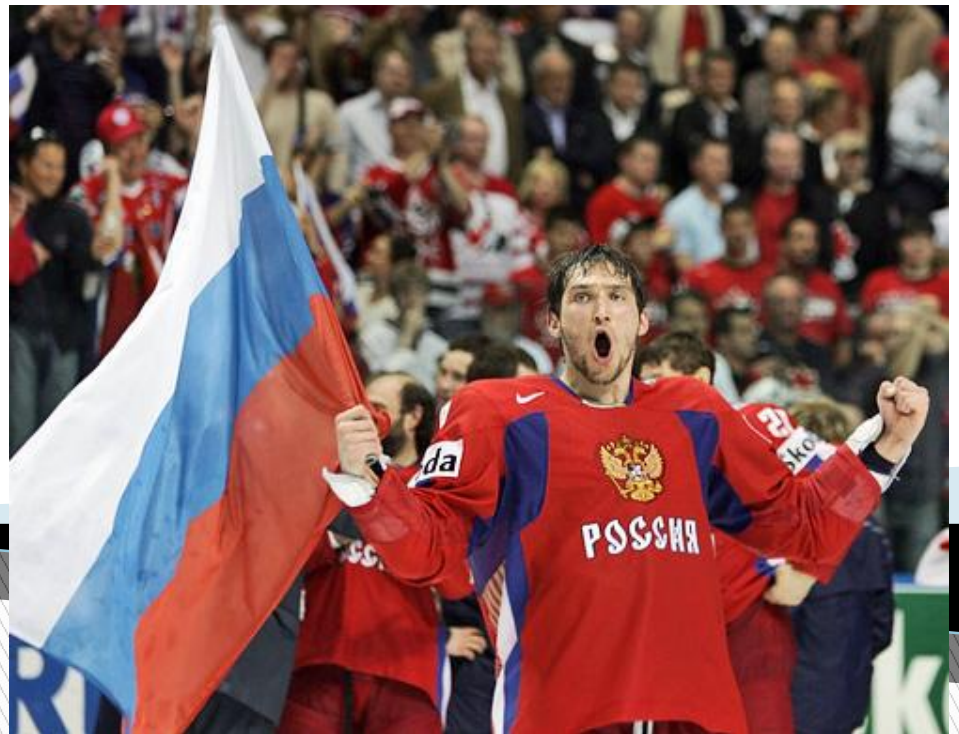

He was drafted in 2004, becoming the second Russian hockey player after Ilya Kovalchuk, who was selected as the first number. In January 2008, Ovechkin signed a 13-year-old Washington contract worth 124 million dollars, becoming the first hockey player to enter into a contract of more than 100 million.

Alexander made his debut in the NHL in 2005-2006 season, winning the first season of "Calder Trophy voting", beating Sidney Crosby. Ovechkin won the Art Ross trophy in 2008 and three times the Ted Lindsay Award, the Hart Trophy and the Maurice Richard Trophy. Ovechkin is one of the few players who repeatedly had over 100 points in 1986 and scored more than 50 goals in a season. At the end of 2009 Ovechkin entered number 10 and the best NHL players of the Decade.
