The most developed Social Networks F F acebook B Twitter VK.com B

First, I would like to present a short review of the above-mentioned web-sites: Facebook, Twitter and VK.com.

Social Network Referrers

Facebook was founded by Mark Zukerberg, who was a second-year student of the Harvard University. Initially F. was supposed to be some kind of an electronic database of students, but the idea turned out to be so useful and applicative, that Mark went on further improving of his project. It used to bind together only American universities, but when the populatity of Zukerberg's creation had reached it's top, an access to Facebook was given to common people.

Facebook helps you connect and share with the people in your life.

Nowadays Facebook continues to grow at a rapid pace. It's a web-network, high-developed that is provided with up-to-date flash technologies, badgets (a kind of a visit card with the link to your Facebook page, that you can add to the blog of your site) and an integration with most visited of the resources Internet. Undoubtedly, all of us have seen a social widget with a button "Share" or "Like" on news feeds. It's a perfect way to discuss an article with your friends.

I registered on Facebook in 2006 and at that time there was still an option, where you were oblidged to select the state and join a particular network of your institution of higher education or school.

Twitter is a microblogging web-service. The number of users counts more than 190 million.

The main aim is sharing 140-character messages. There are some advantages of Twitter, for example when the message is short you can catch the point very fast, but as for me, I can't express my opinion in such a limited way. Voluminous thoughts are almost impossible to express within 140 signs. But beyond dispute is that tweets immediately reflect the current situation and let you be informed about event, which is happening right now.

VK.com is a Russian analogue of Facebook. You needn't to be an expert of programming or design to recognize a striking likeness of these two networks. Frankly speaking, even the creator of VK doesn't deny the fact he came to the idea after an acquaintance with Facebook.

The site provides more opportunities of entertainment to it's users. But they reached this goal at the expense of ignoring copyrights: lots of content is uploaded, but it's almost unverifiable. Without continuous search any abusing or obscene videos, photos and music can be found and downloaded.

VK.com hasn't always been an open social web (at the beginning of it's existence there was a system of invitations), but not long ago it was decided by Pavel Durov again that an access can be granted only if a newcomer has a special invitation from his pal. He gives proof to his position with the argument: "An increased amount of spam and fake accounts pester me. The time has come to return to origins, it is handy and secure".

In Russia VK.com is mostly known as Vkontakte.ru. VK.com is a special domain for foreign countries, the main difference – there is no annoying advertisement and the interface is lightened.

To sum up, I'd like to express my opinion on what social web is better. I'm persuaded that nothing can replace meeting friends and spending time with those we love in reality. Nothing natural must be changed to artificial. If there is at least the tiniest possibility to avoid the online life, we should take advantage of it.
