

NATIONAL TRADITIONS OF GREAT BRITAIN

- Britain is probably one of the few countries that value their traditions and heritage

- In Britain, low-rise constructions are still dominate. The British prefer to live in separate homes, but not in high-rise penthouse. Most of the houses are built for two families, always with a fireplace

- In the UK, the tradition of national dress hasn't forgotten. In areas such as Scotland still wear kilts. Men prefer suits, tuxedos, hats in the form of cylinders, in general, all the things that are gentlemen.

The British love their traditional cuisine, which is dominated by meat dishes. Various puddings are the national dish of the country.

- Previously, women had a very small rights in G.B., but now things have changed. Earlier in the average English family had many children, but now the birth rate dropped significantly. Modern Family in England has 1-2 children.

- Sport traditions have survived from ancient times. The British are addicted to horse-riding and golf. Many people play polo
